On June 20th these girls will fly to the "Camp of the Dells" in Wisconsin for a week's intensive training at the country's most outstanding twirling camp. Linda and Lina will represent their respective stateg and compete in the National Baton Twirling Contest and Winter Carnival, in St. Paul, Minn., in January, 1960.

NEWS FOR VETERANS

Points in connection with the Federal program of education assistance to war orphans were summarized by the Veterans Administration.

Those generally eligible under the program are young people between the ages of 18 and 23 who are the children of veterans who have died from disease or injury incurred or aggravated in line of duty in active service during World War I, World War II or the Korean conflict.

The parent or guardian of the deceased veteran's child must file an application with VA. If VA finds the basic eligibility requirements are met, the application will be approved provisionally.

Next, the young man or woman, accompanied by the parent or the guardian, will receive VA vocational counseling, to assist him or her in the selection of a goal and development of a program of education. Meanwhile, the parent or the guardian must prepare an educational plan showing the selected goal, the program of education, school or schools he plans to attend, and an estimate of the total cost of the education. The plan becomes a part of the application.

Homemakers Items

How does Mrs. Homemaker feel about the packages in which her canned and frozen foods come?

Agricultural economists at VPI pass along the results of a survey conducted by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. In the survey homemakers in three large cities were asked their opinions of present containers for canned and frozen foods.

In general, frozen food packages were considered more convenient than cans. The two reasons most often given for this opinion were that they were easier to open and easier to dispose of after emptying.

Almost 9 in 10 homemakers said that present can sizes give enough choice for their needs in terms of number of servings. The reaction concerning frozen packages was less favorable with about two in three homemakers saying they were satisfied with the choice in package size. About one-half of those dissatisfied with the size of present frozen food containers said the packages were too small; about one-third said they were too large, and most of the others said there wasn't enough variety in size.

The homemakers were asked to tell what they liked about both types of containers, what they disliked, and their suggestions for change.

Favorable factors most often mentioned for canned food containers was their ease of storage and the length of time they could be stored. Convenience and variety of sizes were often mentioned. For frozen food packages, convenience was the main positive factor, with storage characteristics (shape, size, and space needed) listed second.

On the negative side, two features stood out as dislikes for canned food containers. The homemakers said that cans were hard to open, and disposal of the empty containers was difficult. "A limited selection of sizes" was the main dislike for frozen food containers, with structural characteristics (flimsy, not well packed, leak) as a secondary dislike.

There were three major suggestions for improving canned food containers — more variety in size, an easier way oi opening, and treating or lining the can to protect the food. The number one complaint for frozen food packages leads to the most frequently mentioned suggestion for improvement —more variety in sizes.

At Washington's bustling National Airport, Allied Aviation Fueling counts on its radio-equipped Chevy to get crews and tank trucks to the right planes at just the right time. Aside from occasional time out for the usual service, its Thrift-master 6-cylinder engine has been running 24 hours a day for the past 9 months!

The fact is, Chevrolet trucks are dead set on dropping the word "downtime" right out of the English language. And they just might, if precision engineering and top-quality materials have anything to say about it. Chevy trucks are put together to stay together—incorporating the most advanced chassis developments, the most efficient 6-cylinder and V8 engine designs. They're built to last, built to keep Chevrolet's hard-earned reputation for reliability flying high.

Going into the real heart of Chevrolet advantages is where your dealer comes in. He'll show you, in feature after feature, that you can't buy more truck dependability – in any weight class—at any price.
